The author reveals the significance of categories for scientific knowledge and philosophical understanding of the mission of man and the meaning of life. The author shows how the philosophy has developed as deep reflection striving to penetrate into the meaning of life in close conjunction with improving scientific understanding of the world. The author states that today philosophy and science are striving to achieve increasingly deeper insight into the nature of the man as the subject of all the relations existing in the world.

Keywords: man, society, science, philosophy, rationality, truth, world, categories, knowledge, being.
