The article describes the concept of “ecocentrism” as an interdisciplinary approach aimed at solving global problems in the “human-nature” system. Its alternatives — anthropocentrism and biocentrism are critically examined. It is shown that anthropocentrism is based on the classical science; biocentrism — on the nonclassical, ecocentrism — on nonclassical and postnonclassical. The basic characteristics of ecocentrism are singled out and its definition is given from philosophical and scientific point of view.

Keywords: global ecological crisis, bioecology, global ecology, social ecology, biocentrism, geocentrism, anthropocentrism, ecocentrism
